- Thank you for putting on this evening. V. helpful.
- Thank you, a timely informative session about something that is on a lot of parents' minds.
- We are keen that our children benefit and learn from online resources and develop digital skills. Although we have very real concerns about their online safety, we want to work with the school to ensure that they aren't afraid unnecessarily and are vigilant to risks but these are put in proportion. Are there things we can do with them at home that are clearly linked to school activities and homework that equip them to use online resources safely and constructively? A good website for age appropriateness is commonsensemedia.org. Kidz is a good app for parental controls on tablets, also has time controls.

Thank you for sharing suggestions about resources: it is always useful to hear what else is available. We encourage children to use resources such as Mathletics and Google Apps at home. Children have their own Google login through which they can create and share work based on what they have done in school and it allows great opportunities for collaborative work. Children are taught how to use Google Apps as part of the curriculum. DG

- Useful evening, thanks. Screen rather unclear. Some blank paper for notes would have been helpful. Thank you.

Thanks for the constructive feedback – we will carefully consider the issues you have raised and use your comments to help improve future parent briefing sessions. JS

- Would be useful to have more info from school on what websites are used in class, which games (educational) are endorsed by the school.

Thank you for this feedback – we will explore how we can best share a list of useful resources using our website. DG
